1. An applicant for government employment was required to answer the following two questions in the course of an examination given during the summer of 1949:
 - a. What would you do if one day one of your friends revealed himself to be opposed to the government and criticized the activity of the government party?
 - b. Imagine yourself to be an Anglo-American spy occupying the position that you wish to secure in our ministry. How would you go about organizing your espionage activity?
2. The examination of the applicant, which was entirely political in content, was three hours in length.

This document is hereby regraded to CONFIDENTIAL in accordance with the letter of 16 October 1978 from the Director of Central Intelligence to the Archivist of the United States.
